Gould "B" Team 22—

West Paris Seconds 6

The Gould "B" Team had little difficulty in defeating the West Paris Seconds last Friday, 22-6. West Paris pitchers seemed unable to silence the bats of the local boys who banged out 22 hits including four triples and a double.

Brooks made his first start of the season as a pitcher and was in complete command all the way. The West Paris boys had plenty of trouble trying to figure out his slants. They made only five hits and three runs in the eight innings Brooks pitched.

Smith—Robinson

Clear skies, an expanse of lawn with a background of evergreen trees, was the setting for a charming outdoor wedding Sunday afternoon at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Charles R. Safford of North Main Street, Randolph, Mass., when Mrs. Safford's niece, Miss Hilda Louise Robinson, became the bride of Dan Milton Smith. The Bridal Chorus from "Lohengrin" was played by Miss Barbara Belcher as the bride passed through an aisle of white satin ribbons to a bower of evergreen and spring flowers where the marriage ceremony was performed by Rev. Warren N. Bixby of Arlington, formerly pastor of Trinity Episcopal Church in Randolph.

Plan Big Dairy Field Day at Highmoor Farm Aug. 6

Plans are well underway for the summer field day and cattle show of the Maine Dairymen's association, Maine Livestock Breeders' association, dairy herd improvement association, and county farm bureaus, at Highmoor Farm, Monmouth, August 6.

The centrally situated grounds and buildings of Highmoor Farm of the Maine Agricultural Experiment Station will afford plenty of room for the large crowd expected to attend. County farm bureaus of Androscoggin-Sagadahoc, Franklin, and Kennebec counties will hold their annual field days at the same time. A special committee is now at work planning a program of interest to women.

Every indication points to a larger show of cattle than last year, when about 130 head were on display at the farm of Fred Nutter, Corinna. Because of the large number of animals expected in the lineup, the committee is already reminding dairymen that all cows must be at the place of show at or before 9:30 in the morning, as judging will begin at 10 o'clock.

The following breeds may be exhibited at the show: Ayrshire, Brown Swiss, Guernsey, Holstein, Jersey, and Milking Shorthorn. Grade animals will be exhibited with the breed they most closely resemble. Only females with dairy herd improvement association records of production may be exhibited.

All animals will be judged 50% on type and 50% on production, with records converted to a mature basis of 305 days, twice-a-day milking. Ribbons will be awarded the first four animals in each of the seven classes for each breed.

ALBANY FOREST FIRE THREATENS BIG AREA

Bethel Crew Saves Mill in 35 Acre Blaze—Cause Unknown—Loss Negligible

A serious forest fire was averted this (Thursday) afternoon when a blaze of unknown origin in cut-over wild land of Stearns and Daniels near Hunt's Corner in Albany reached a hardwood growth after the wind's direction changed and was stopped on other fronts by volunteer workers and members of the Bethel pumper crew. Men had not been working for several weeks in the section where the fire was first seen. Pine is being cut on this lot by Flanders & Perkins of Norway and sawed in their portable mill for the Diamond Match Co.

With the rapid spread of the blaze the mill was threatened for some time although before the arrival of help the crew had wet the roof, carrying water from a nearby brook. With the pumper stationed by the road and the brook dammed, water was forced through 1000 feet of hose, effectively stopping the fire after about 35 acres had been burned over. The loss was estimated at practically nothing as the land covered included only slash and an old orchard. Neither the mill, logs or sawed lumber were harmed.

Both Mr. Flanders and Warden Roy Wardwell were enthusiastic in their praise of the work of the Bethel pumper and its volunteer crew. The water supply was limited and it is said that excellent judgment was used in the fight. Several CCC units were notified and one outfit arrived after the fire was under control.

Miss Althea Sweeney of Errol is working for Mrs. S. S. Greenleaf.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Haselton of Dover-Foxcroft spent the week-end in town.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Dwyer of Whitman, Mass., were week-end guests at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Leslie Davis.

Mrs. Lulu Eames, who has spent the past winter with Miss Grace Ames in Brooklyn, N. Y., returned to her home here Saturday.

Miss Alfreda Wheeler of Barra, Vt., visited her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Wesley Wheeler, over the week-end.

Miss Urania Place and Walter Sessions of Providence, R. I., were week-end guests of Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert Brown.

David Kirk was painfully injured this (Thursday) afternoon while on his way from school to his home on Chandler Hill. Stopping at Alder River bridge his watch fell into the water, and while wading to recover it he cut both feet so that it was necessary to take 11 stitches. He was assisted to the road by his brother Richard, who stopped a passing car which carried him to a doctor's office.

Little White Windmill

By DOROTHY PIPER
McClure Newspaper Syndicate.
WNU Service.

JACK was a good-looking young lawyer, and Jill was an equally good-looking young lady, who stayed at home and kept house for her old dad. Every pleasant afternoon, Jack and Jill went up the hill, not to fetch a pail of water, but to get an excellent view of the harbor, which was obtained from a certain high point of land.

Jill's father was a maker of novelties and her shop was a familiar landmark on Main street. Even the old-fashioned front yard was a toyland in itself, for a dozen little Indians piddled their own corners, jolly Jack tore jugged miniature cars, and gaily painted windmills spun merrily in the breeze, all for the benefit of the passerby.

The old toy manufacturer carried his ego in the rear of the store, while his baby daughter attended to the customers. And business was exceedingly good, for a vacationist seldom left Seaport without buying a souvenir of the quaint little village. That was how Jack had become acquainted with Jill. He

It was almost a fortnight, however, before he plucked up enough courage to invite Jill to go riding. Jill was willing, but her father was skeptical.

"Better stick to your own kind," was his simple logic. "These city fellows are all right in their place, but when they take up with a poor little country girl, no good can come of it."

At length the old man, too, was won over by Jack's steady brown eyes, and Jill experienced the first thrill of her lifetime.

Jill couldn't dance; she didn't aspire to wear Parisian gowns; but she was real, and she knew the rough coast-country as a mariner knows the seven seas. Under her guidance, Jack piloted his car over miles and miles of sand dunes. Together they "panicked" in quiet coves, together they swam in sun-baked bays, and Jack marveled at Jill's dexterity and fearlessness in the water. She was a graceful, unfaded gull, that describes her, and in the privacy of his room, an enchanting young bachelor found himself exclaiming, "I'm Falling in Love With Someone."

Jill never guessed that Jack's friendship was of a deeper nature until the afternoon they discovered a big loon, and with childish glee was picturing herself aboard it, bound, perhaps, for foreign lands. Jack hadn't even seen the steamer, but was content to gaze upon the delightful contour of Jill's wistful little face.

Quite abruptly, he seized her in his arms and cried: "Jill, I love you, I've got to have you, say you will be mine always!"

The girl's surprise overpowered her emotions; she had no sense of joy or dismay. "I'll see," she said, and her voice sounded far away.

October came, and Jack's return to the city was imperative. Upon his last day in Seaport, he called with the car to take Jill for a final spin. When she joined him, she carried a tiny white windmill under her arm. "Please take me to our hill," she exclaimed, as she seated herself beside him. "I want to stake my claim."

Jack wondered all the way to their destination, but he asked no questions. When they reached the top of the hill, Jill produced two nails, and with the aid of a stone she fastened the windmill in a branch of a sturdy oak tree. Then, with a piece of red crayon, she wrote, "Jack and Jill" upon one side of the windmill.

"What's the big idea?" asked Jack, impatiently.

"I'm going to let fate decide our destinies," Jill replied, solemnly. "Two months from now I want you to come back to Seaport. If our names have weathered the storms, if they are still clear and distinct, why, I'll be yours for always. But if—"

Just two months later Jack returned to Seaport. The roads were snowbound, almost impassable, so he and Jill made the trip to the hill on snowshoes. The inscription on the windmill was as clear as the day Jill had written it.

No one saw the lovers embrace. Nothing broke the silence save the intermittent whirr of the little white windmill. And no one, except Jill, knew of the tramp she had taken the day before, for the purpose of retracing the words, "Jack and Jill."

Which only goes to prove that, city girls or country gals, there's a little bit of schemer in them all.

The SNAPSHOT GUILD

SOFTEN THOSE SHADOWS!

No harsh shadows on the faces in this picture! The paper makes an excellent reflector, allows subjects to face AWAY from the sun, not squint INTO it! Try it and see!

WHEN one advises, "Use a reflector to soften and lighten shadows," most snapshooters think, "Oh, that is too complicated — too much trouble."

As a matter of fact, any white or light-colored surface can serve as a reflector, to make shadows soft and full of detail. For instance, look at a man reading a newspaper. The newspaper catches light and reflects it into his face — it is a very good shadow illuminator.

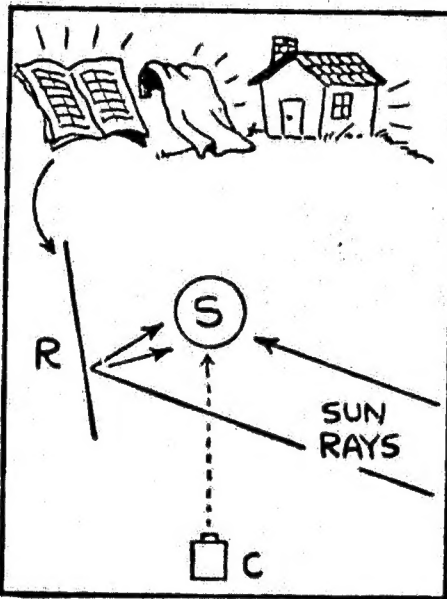

A white spring or summer dress catches light and reflects it to the subject's face, and under her chin. A broad white hat brim catches light from the dress, and reflects it to the subject's forehead.

A white building (see diagram) can be used as a reflector to lighten the shadow side of the person you are picturing. A white picnic cloth, spread in the sun, reflects enough light to soften shadows in the faces of all the group around it.

Whenever you are taking pictures of people, especially in sunlight, make sure that the shadows are softened in some fashion. Black shadows under the subject's eyebrows and nose ruin a picture. Use any sort of reflecting surface — a white cardboard, white cloth, newspaper, the wall of a white house — anything handy that will reflect light. It takes only a moment to arrange subject or reflector properly — and the picture will be immensely improved.

John van Guilder

A white wall will reflect light to the shadow side of the face if the subject is placed properly. So will a newspaper, or white sheet. S, subject; C, camera; R, reflecting surface.

BETHEL NEEDS

More and Better Sidewalks—winter

Night Watchman—All the Year
Enforced Traffic Rules

THE LOW DOWN from HICKORY GROVE

A congressman, he may be lacking in some ways, but when it comes to listening, he takes no back seat—he is a super-champion—he knows listening.

And voters who have been sitting around and let the Govt. take the roof off their house, they are waking up and sending messages and letters—and talking turkey.

And if congress will now get up some steam and start in and do away with some of the comedy already on the book, and omit any more new laws, we can stop wondering every night about what tomorrow will bring forth.

And if we just had the 10 commandments to go by, and nothing else, it would be great. And to study law, you would just read Deuterom-ony. And parden, you don't need a lawyer to explain it, like with the 3A, where even a Philadelphia lawyer cannot figure it out.

And Deuteronomy, it is a book in the Bible, and is not some country in Africa or something to do with your appendix.

Things look better.

Yours, with the low down,
JO SERRA

THE BEAN BALL

Odd Tree in Jamaica Is Called "Woman's Tongue"

The "Woman's Tongue," which grows in Jamaica, British West Indies, is a strange, podbearing tree unlike anything in northern climes.
These pods, which are reddish-brown in color and nearly a yard in length, are given their picturesque nickname by the natives because the seeds are loose in the pod and can be depended upon to rattle constantly when stirred by gentle breezes, notes a correspondent in the Los Angeles Times.

Some 2,100 varieties of plant life are to be found in the island, so that it is referred to as the "botanical garden of the New World."

Pimento and annatto are prominent among the island's products—but pimento is not what the American housewife knows by name, being the common all-spice, the berries of which grow in clusters on trees some thirty feet tall.

When harvest time approaches, before the berries are fully ripe, a small boy clambers to the top of the tree, breaks off the ends and throws them to the ground, where the berries are gathered up like coffee.
Anatto is a reddish berry which, when boiled, yields an oily extract used as a dye.

Jamaica ginger grows abundantly in patches on the red hillsides.
The plant somewhat resembles the currant-bush, but only the root is valuable, the tops being crushed and used again as seed. A good yield, Jamaicans say, is 2,000 pounds of ginger to the acre.

Electrified Farm Workshop Replaces the Village Smithy

An electrified and well-equipped workshop plays an essential part in the business of modern farming.

NOWADAYS, when passing through the small towns of this country, one is impressed by the nearly-complete disappearance of that heroic and interesting figure, the village blacksmith. No longer does the musical clang of his hammer on the anvil disturb the peace of the otherwise almost Sunday-like calm. Instead, this once-familiar sound has been replaced by the constant din of un-musical automobile horns and racing motors. For Main Street has become as modern as Broadway and, in the process, the smithy has gone the way of the horse and buggy.

The blacksmith shop was an important adjunct of the farm and, therefore, one cannot help but wonder what effect its passing has had on the business of farming. For, with the large amount of labor-saving machinery now in use, it is vitally important that repairs be made quickly if a crew of men is to be kept working or, perhaps, an entire crop saved. If the farmer has an electrified, lighted and well-equipped workshop, he not only can eliminate many of such worries but also he frequently can save the wasted time and expense of a trip to town for replacements or, where one still can be found, to the blacksmith shop for repairs.

Small electric motors in the farm workshop will run a lathe, drill, forge, grindstone, metal and wood saws, planer, sander and many other tools formerly operated by hand. Such motors are so low in both original cost and operating expense that they easily can pay for themselves in a single season.

In addition to the above, there are portable electric drills and other tools helpful in repairing equipment that is too large or too heavy to bring to the workshop or to take to town. Electric soldering irons, arc welders, glue-pots and battery chargers also have many uses on every farm.

When the need arises, there is no more important place on the farm than a workshop. The wiring and equipping of such a shop should have the serious consideration of every farmer.

Ulster Boasts Largest

Lake in British Isles

Ulster people do not forget to remind visitors that Lough Neagh, over which a halo of legend, mystery and romance ever plays, is the largest lake in the British Isles, or that island-studded Lough Erne vies with Killarney in serene and placid beauty, observes a writer in the Los Angeles Times.

The "Lake of the Silent Valley," storing over 3,000,000,000 gallons of water to supply the needs of the capital city of Belfast and a chain of intermediate towns, is one of the show places of Ulster. Flanked by heather-clad hills and sentinelled by the towering peaks of Mourne, it has a natural setting of rare and restful peace and tranquillity. Here the silence of the solitude can almost be felt. The water board engineers who first planned the dam-meandered its easy-going way to the Irish sea changed its former name of Happy valley to Silent val-

OXFORD COUNTY UNITED PARISH

The Memorial Sunday Service at North Waterford was most inspiring and helpful. At that service the hymn books that had been given in memory of former members of the Church and others interested in the Church were dedicated. We feel that this is a very beautiful Memorial indeed, and much credit is due Mrs. Dresser who has been so interested in writing to the former residents of the village to arouse their interest.

We have had some real baseball rivalry in the Parish. North Waterford has been the scene of some lively games, when the Grammar School of that village "locked horns," as they say, with a team of the boys from South Waterford and Waterford Schools. The latter team so far seems to be leading in the series. The girls from the two schools have also been playing.
Exciting games! We know not what the score will be this week, but so far the girls from South Waterford have been carrying off the honors.

Monday night, Men's Club, at the Wilkins Community House, Waterford! The ladies are invited. Mr.
Gledhill has some very fine movies he is showing of the South, and Mr.
Spaulding, of Harrison, is also going to bring some interesting films.

Tuesday night, we will turn again to North Waterford, and there we are going to find a most delicious supper awaiting us. Doesn't it make you hungry just to think of it?
Just call around!

Thursday all roads lead again to the Albany Circle! We are hoping that the North Waterford Players will be on hand that evening to give us the play which was not given at the last Circle.

"Play Day" we believe is the name given to the day that was "Flag Day." Anyway the Waterford Schools are going to have a great day on the 10th of June.

We are expecting that in a week or two the schedule may be changed to give East Stoneham an earlier service, but for this week the schedule will remain as it has been for the last few weeks.

Roller Skating
Wheeled skates were used on the roads of Holland as far back as the Eighteenth century, strips of wood to which large wooden spools were attached being fastened to the shoes. It was the invention of the four-wheeled skate working on rubber pads, by J. L. Plimpton of New York in 1863 that made the amusement popular. The first wheels were made of boxwood, and these were followed by the skate with pin bearings, and the Richardson ball-bearing skate in the eighties. Roller skating became the rage in this country and Europe through the nineties and into the first decade of the Twentieth century; since then it has had several spurts of popularity as an adult amusement.

She resigned the crown to her cousin, Charles Augustus, in 1654, embraced Catholicism and lived for some time in Paris. On the death of Charles Augustus in 1660 she vainly endeavored to regain the throne. She was an accomplished linguist and friend and correspondent of many famous literati. She died in Rome in 1689.

Elephants Destructive
Elephants can often be a decided pest and damage in their native Africa. A herd can often lay waste a banana plantation in a single night, trampling underfoot what they do not eat. Whenever a telegraph line is erected the straight, smooth poles seem to be irresistible to them; the elephant seems to think it was put up just to rub himself against, and when one pole goes down why there is another one just down the line a bit.

A Story of Thermopylae
In that epic story of Thermopylae, where the little band of Greeks withstood the entire Persian army until all had perished, one Spartan only lived to return, and he only because he was so sick that he had remained behind the fighting lines. Carried back to Sparta, this Aristodemus lived there scorned and avoided by all until a year later, recovered, he fell valiantly fighting in battle. Even then they denied him the honors customarily paid the brave dead. So hard a race was the Spartan.

Gaspe Legends Are Told by Native Fisher Folk

The fisher folk of the Gaspe Peninsula delight in narrating the weird stories and legends of the past.

The very names of some of the Gaspe localities suggest unusual happenings: Ile au Massacre (Massacre island), where a band of Indians was massacred; Pointe Frigate (Frigate point), where an old galleon was wrecked; Manche d'Epee (Sword Hill), where an old sword hilt, dating back to the early arrival of the first white man, was found.

The tourist who visits this land of legends of the Province of Quebec may often get some "oldest inhabitant" to relate some of these tales he will swear to be true. A favorite is that of the ghost ships which are wrecked yearly as tempest-lashed waves batter them against dark cliffs. The story goes that once a year, usually on a bright moonlit night, a terrific storm blows up and streaks of lightning throw an eerie spotlight on an ancient barque whose crew are garbed like pirates of old and armed to the teeth with cutlasses and muskets.

They will tell you, these hardy fisher folk, that there is a crash as the ship strikes the cliffs and immediately afterward the storm abates, the clouds break and again the moon beams down on a tranquil scene.

American Vermilion
American vermilion is a different color from English, French and Chinese vermilions, which are made of sulphur and mercury. Those colors are found naturally in large quantities as the mineral cinabar. The natural cinabar is not brilliant enough in color, however. Most of the English vermilion is made by chemical process. American vermilion is a basic chromate of lead and is used mostly in the commercial arts, while English, French and Chinese vermilions are used in the fine arts and are more expensive.

SCIENCE AND ENGINEERING JOIN TO DEFEAT RURAL LIFE ENEMIES—ROAD MUD AND DUST

Left—Science has proved that mixing the proper proportions of gravel, clay and moisture can convert this typical New England mud "road" into one that is as dustless in August as it is mudless in April.

Right—The proof. Here is another section of the same New Hampshire road pictured in Cheshire County on the same day. Science's new, inexpensive formula did it.

Once a road that bogged farm vehicles in mire or powdered them with dust, this splendid road resulted from the proper admixture of gravel, clay and calcium chloride to give a "stabilized" turnpike of the type recommended by the U. S. Bureau of Public Roads for low-cost, all-season purpose.

SCIENCE and engineering have effectively combined forces to fight those twin evils of New England rural life—road dust and mud. Making use of just such soil materials as can be found in almost any county, the United States Bureau of Public Roads has developed formulas for building low-cost, all-season roads that from now on likely will get a bigger share of federal construction funds if the clamor for better secondary highways is any indication of future trend.

The Bureau has found that tiny drops of moisture form the key for locking soil particles together. In road making, definite proportions of gravel, sand, silt and very little clay, plus some moisture tend to bring about what is called a "stabilized" condition which results in a road tread that is quite hard and, with proper maintenance, is as dustless in August as it is mudless in April. Traffic of the kind usually found on "farm-to-market" roads actually operates to make a better road instead of breaking it up. This is because the stabilized road materials are compacted even more by the rolling weights above.

How to provide and maintain the necessary moisture during dry months was the problem. Then chemistry stepped in with a substance—calcium chloride—that, when spread on the road, absorbs moisture directly from the atmosphere to keep the road surface damp.

Experimenting independently to find a type of road that would cost little, yet provide a good surface for the greatest number of people the year-round, the highway departments of several New England communities developed dustless, mudless roads of the stabilized kind. Photographed above are two sections of the same New Hampshire road taken on the same day last spring. But one section had been stabilized. It happened that only clay and calcium chloride were needed, and the improvement was made at a cost of only $300 a mile. Many rural roads would require no more to bring them to a state of year-round usefulness. In the bottom photo is a fully stabilized, fairly heavy traffic road, well drained and having a thick wearing mat of properly proportioned gravel, sand, silt, chemical and a little binder clay. Such a road costs from $1,000 to $2,500 a mile as compared to $7,000 to $20,000 a mile for heavy-travel pavements.

Highway departments have found that where funds are limited, stabilization may be accomplished in "stages" over several seasons. Here the road surface is "consolidated" by adding right amounts of coarse material with clay and chemical to give a hard tread. Next year the process is repeated to give a thicker surface, both mudless and dustless.

Where funds are extremely limited, surface consolidation can be started and dust eliminated by spreading calcium chloride alone, at a cost of from $150 to $300 a mile. As more funds become available, the improvement can be carried further on a "pay-as-you-go" plan, to eventually arrive at a fully stabilized, all-weather road.

dolph. The bride was given in marriage by her father, Elias Seymour Robinson. The bride, an attractive brunette, wore a gown of ivory satin, on train with full tulle veil caught with a coronet of orange blossoms. She carried a white satin prayer book with white satin streamers and lilies of the valley.

Her matron of honor was Mrs. Norman Clarke of Canton and her gown was powder blue taffeta with gold allppers and accessories. She carried a bouquet of Tailsman roses and delphiniums with gold streamers knotted with the same flowers and she wore a coronet of the same. The bridegroom was attended by Norman Clarke as best man.

The ushers were George Foley, Harry Russell, Royal Safford and Henry Safford.

After the ceremony a reception was held on the lawn and in the house where a collation was served. The individual ice bore the initials of the bride's and bridegroom's names. In the receiving line were Mr. and Mrs. Elias Seymour Robinson, parents of the bride; Mr. and Mrs. Herman H. Smith, parents of the groom, and Mr. and Mrs. Charles R. Safford, uncle and aunt of the bride, with whom she has made her home for several years.

Assisting were Miss Marie Callahan, Mrs. Dorothy Thorn Russell and Miss Ivy Short, close friends of the bride. Mrs. Robinson wore grey with navy blue accessories and Mrs. Smith, mother of the bridegroom, wore tan with a picture hat to match. The bride's going-away gown was blue crepe with beige trimmings.

After a wedding trip to Washington, Detroit and returning by way of Montreal and Maine, Mr. and Mrs. Smith will reside in Randolph.

Mrs. Smith was born in Bethel, Me., and has made her home in Randolph for several years. She graduated from Stetson High school and is a member of the Junior Ladies' Library Association.
